Sweeping New Divorce Laws In Effect in England, Wales

LONDON, Jan. 1 (Reuters)—Sweeping new divorce laws went into effect today in England and Wales.

Their purpose is to save marriages or, failing that, to terminate them with dignity and compassion.

Passed against strong parliamentary opposition, the new legislation has been criticized as a "Casanova's charter" and a paradise for philanderers.

Lawyers expect more and easier divorces. One legal expert in divorce predicted that the reforms—establishing the principle of divorce by consent—would lead to a sort of conveyor-belt system, with clients filling out forms as casually as for a driving license.

But a spokesman for the divorce registry in London said there was no perceptible rush today, although there are an estimated 100,000 persons who can take advantage of the new law.

"The legislation is supposed in theory to make divorce easier, but in practice we doubt whether it will work out that way," he added.

A spokesman for the Law Society, which has followed the legislative process closely, predicted that 1971 will see an increase of perhaps 10 percent over the 54,000 divorces decreed in England and Wales in 1969.

Basis Is Changed

The main law coming into effect today, the Divorce Reform Act, abandons the traditional concept that termination of marriages must be based on a matrimonial offense. Instead, it makes the irretrievable breakdown of marriage the basis of divorce. Desertion, adultery or cruelty are still among the reasons for breakdown that can be cited.

Complex will also be able to divorce by mutual consent after a two-year separation or after five years apart even if one partner refuses.

The Divorce Reform Act was introduced by a Labor member of Parliament, Alec Jones, 46, a schoolteacher.

He said he had seen so much "civil war" in homes where marriages had become an empty shell that he determined to try to sweep away the hypocrisy surrounding divorce.

"What we wanted to do essentially was to look at the condition of marriage itself rather than consider it exclusively from the standpoint of wrongdoing and the guilty party," Mr. Jones said.

1966 Commission

"We are trying to strengthen marriage, not to weaken it. For us it is not a question of making divorce easier. But when the partnership has become useless to society, harmful to children and distressing to the partners, we hope that it can be ended more rationally, more humanely and more compassionately."

The act is in line with recommendations of a legal commission in November, 1966, which urged that when a marriage died, it be buried with decency and dignity.

The new proposals also take account of a consensus on divorce reform worked out under committees appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. Michael Ramsey.

A companion measure to the new bill seeks to cushion the effects of divorce on family and property.

Another Labor member of Parliament, Robert Hughes, is preparing a similar bill to apply to Scotland, which is not covered by the new measures.

Historically, English and Welsh laws have had a strong bias against women, who were regarded in the Victorian and Edwardian eras as man's chattels. Mr. Jones said this attitude largely ended with 1923 reforms which lessened legal discrimination between husband and wife.

Bonn Denies Any Invasion Role in Guinea

CONAKRY, Jan. 1 (AP)—The West German government tonight branded as "false from start to finish" a Radio Conakry broadcast charging West German implication in a November invasion of Guinea allegedly aimed at creating a civil war and the assassination of President Sekou Touré.

Bonn said the allegations in yesterday's broadcast were either "fabrications by the radio or slanders led to the Guinea radio by a third party."

West Germany's acting chief of mission in Conakry was ordered to deliver a protest against the allegations and urge the Guinea government to stop making them.

On Wednesday, West Germany temporarily withdrew its ambassador to Guinea following the expulsion of 100 West German technicians and development-aid workers were expelled and two West Germans are being held.

Bonn also asked its embassy to seek release of the two West Germans, identified as a Hermann Stehld, who was running a youth village in the interior of Guinea, and a man named Marx. Both are suspected of espionage, according to Radio Conakry.

The radio also made a connection between the November invasion and the suicide a few days later in Lisbon of the West German ambassador to Portugal and his wife.

Reason for Expulsions

Bonn apparently received a report on the Radio Conakry allegations from its embassy, the broadcast said. West German participation in a November plot had been uncovered, and that was the reason 100 West German technicians and development-aid workers were expelled and two West Germans are being held.

Bonn also asked its embassy to seek release of the two West Germans, identified as a Hermann Stehld, who was running a youth village in the interior of Guinea, and a man named Marx. Both are suspected of espionage, according to Radio Conakry.

The radio also made a connection between the November invasion and the suicide a few days later in Lisbon of the West German ambassador to Portugal and his wife.

Eban Envisions Palestinian Home 'East of Israel'

TEL AVIV, Jan. 1 (UPI)—Foreign Minister Abba Eban said in a radio and television broadcast tonight that only Middle East peace will bring welfare and freedom to Palestinian Arabs.

He said the Palestinians may eventually find their home "east of Israel," but did not say if that meant he favored establishment of a Palestinian state on the occupied West Bank of the Jordan or on the east side of the river.

"In a state of peace there will be to the east of Israel a state in which the Palestinians will constitute a majority and of which most Palestinians will be citizens," Mr. Eban said.

"The welfare and freedom of the Palestinians, then depends on the establishment of peace and on that alone," he said.

Mr. Eban spoke in Arabic. The government press office later provided an English translation of his remarks.

NEW DELHI, Jan. 1 (AP)—Shah Ram, a member of the Rajasthan state legislature and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Congress party, was murdered early today.

Denmark Reports Rise in Sex Crimes

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 1 (UPI)—The number of sexual crimes committed in Denmark rose slightly in 1970 for the first time since all barriers against pornography were removed.

A police spokesman, however, said that the 3.4 percent rise over the 1969 total was small considering the overall 30 percent increase in the number of all crimes.

"It was the worst year since 1943 under the German occupation," he said when the annual figures were presented yesterday.

In 1969 the number of sexual crimes dropped 31 percent from 1968, but several minor offense categories had been abolished. The number of serious offenses like rape, attempted rape and other forms of sexual violence remained unchanged.

"Today cases of voyeurism, exhibitionism and indecent interference with small girls are almost non-existent," the police spokesman said. Denmark, in the first such move by any nation, dropped all restrictions against printed pornography in 1967. A year later

Walla Walla Convicts To Shave, End Strike

WALLA WALLA, Wash., Jan. 1 (AP)—Prisoners at the Washington State Penitentiary voted by more than 3 to 1 on New Year's Eve to shave their beards and end a ten-day work stoppage over grievances against the prison.

News Analysis Foreign Protests Helped Save 'Basque 6'

By Richard Eder

MADRID, Jan. 1 (NYT)—The soothing foreign reaction to the Burgos court-martial aroused an angry counter-reaction in Spain. But ultimately, it helped to save the lives of the accused.

Day after day, readers of the Spanish press were told about demonstrations in Brussels, boycotts of Spanish shipping in Marseilles, telegrams of protest from the Slovakian Shoemakers Association, caricatures in the Scandinavian press showing Generalissimo Francisco Franco with his fangs dripping blood.

Spain has an obsession: It is called the "Black Legend." Spaniards are told that the rest of the world, because of perfidious British historians, think of them as bullfighters, the persecutors of the Jews and the toe-nail pullers of the Inquisition.

2 Themes of Rightists

Among the themes in the big right-wing demonstrations of loyalty to Gen. Franco that swept Spain last week were two: denunciations of foreign interference and demands that "separatists"—the Basque guerrillas tried at Burgos—be put against a wall and shot.

The question is: Were all the "Damn the French" and "Out with the Communist conspiracy" slogans really a screen behind which the government could move toward clemency? Observers believe this highly probable.

Gen. Franco, when he announced clemency on television Wednesday night, said that one thing that allowed him to do so was the massive demonstration of political support he had been given in the rallies.

Spain is trying hard to define itself into Europe. The old authoritarian tradition and much of the structure of the Franco regime make occasional massive dictatorial gestures—such as the death sentences for six Basques—inevitable. Equally inevitable is the morning-after realization by the regime that it cannot really afford such gestures.

Cold and Practical

Gen. Franco is a cold, practical man. It was he who decided that Spain must evolve slowly toward Europe 15 years ago, when he found that his old civil war dictatorship was isolated and running out of steam and money.

The progress toward Europe has been slow and halting. Undoubtedly the regime will have to change before its new ties can really be accomplished. Equally certain, Spain has no real other direction in which to move.

The Communist and left-wing demonstrations in Brussels and Paris and the Tass communiqués may have given fuel to the extreme right. But it was the cautious statements of the West German, French, Belgian and British governments that really counted with Gen. Franco.

Even more important was a personal telephone call from Pope Paul VI to Gen. Franco. The church—to the despair of many churchmen—is one of the historical supports of the Franco regime.

In recent years this has begun to change. But the call from the Pontiff and the flood of telegrams from Spanish bishops were something that Gen. Franco and his generals could not possibly ignore.

Obituaries Roy Henderson, Composed 'Birth of Blues,' 'Lucky Star'

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 1 (AP)—Roy Henderson, 74, composer of some of the most enduring popular songs in American music, died of a heart attack at his home here last night.

Most of his composing was done as the music-writing member of the team of DesiVla Brown and Henderson. Their hits included such standards as "The Birth of the Blues," "If All Depends on You," "Varsity Drag," "You're the Cream in My Coffee," "Button Up Your Overcoat," and "You Are My Lucky Star."

The team contributed to a succession of hit musicals on Broadway in the 1930s, and Mr. Henderson went on to provide a number of movie musical scores as well.

He teamed with lyricist Lew Brown in 1932, and their first hit song, "Georgette," was heard in the "Greenwich Village Follies" that year.

In the next two years he worked with a variety of lyricists and established himself as a tunesmaker of the first rank with such songs as "That Old Gang of Mine," "Alabama Bound," "Bye, Bye Blackbird," "I'm sitting on top of the world" and "Five Foot Two, Eyes of Blue."

Cyril Scott

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The death of British composer Cyril Scott at 91 was announced here yesterday.

The German-trained musician produced his first symphony at Darmstadt in 1920 and his first opera, "The Alchemist," at Essen in 1925.

His work was praised even before World War I by such contemporaries as Debussy, Elgar and Richard Strauss, and from the twenties on his symphonies, operas and chamber music were heard in many of the world's concert halls.

He also composed for piano many songs and short pieces noted for their lyrical quality, continuing to write music until his old age.

At 90, in 1969, he attended a performance in London's Elizabeth Hall of a piano concerto he wrote in 1913, which was first performed in 1915 under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham.

A musical prodigy who produced his first compositions at the age of 7, young Scott was trained at the Frankfurt Conservatory, where he was a fellow student of Percy Grainger.

Among his most popular songs, widely known to the public, are "Lullaby" and "Blackbird Song." His orchestral works include "Heroic Suite," the "Fynness Maledine Overture," "Anade" and "Two Passacaglias," a piano concerto.

His operas, besides "The Alchemist," were "The Shrine" and "The Saint of the Mountain."

Lt. Gen. Angheles Evert

ATHENS, Jan. 1 (NYT)—Lt. Gen. Angheles Evert, 78, who used his position as Athens chief of police to aid the Allies and Greek resistance forces during the Axis occupation, died of heart failure at his home yesterday.

From 1941 to 1944, Gen. Evert, while ostensibly cooperating with the Germans and Italians, was the liaison between the Greek resistance forces and Allied secret agents operating in Greece. The radio he had secretly installed at Athens police headquarters was the major channel of communications with the Allies and the Greek government in exile.

As chief of police, with advance notice of planned arrests, Gen. Evert supplied warnings and hiding places for the agents wanted by the Germans. He provided authentic-looking false identity papers for both agents and Greek Jews hunted by the Nazis.

Professor's Attack on Monetarism May Presage Shift in U.S. Policy

John Maynard Keynes

The earlier major revolutions—all of which have left their impact on contemporary economic thought—were:
The economic revolution of 1776, in which Adam Smith changed the basic concept of the wealth of nations from the possession of gold to the power of a nation to produce real goods and services...

accept it as a necessary price of solving other pressing domestic issues—this seems to be the current view of the present administration...
Monetarism "is seriously inadequate as an approach to monetary theory, judged by prevailing standards of academic economics..."

Its cardinal tenet was that moderate and steady growth in the money supply would solve the problems of inflation and unemployment, and that the money supply was far more important than tax and budget changes as determinants of the level of economic activity and of prices...
The monetarists had to wait for the moment when their counterrevolution would have strong political support. It came with the escalation of the Vietnam war in 1968 and the failure of the New Economics—the Keynesians—to control inflation...

It is the administration's program of slow monetary growth that is its entire effect during its first two years in stopping the real growth of the economy, in raising the level of unemployment, but with very little effect on inflation—indeed with escalation of inflation for many months...
This impact upon prices, output, and employment was not expected by the administration and cost it dearly at the polls...

Earlier, men like Herbert Stein of the Council of Economic Advisers, were willing to argue for very rapid rates of monetary growth to restore full employment before the 1972 election...
Now, two years after the counterrevolutionists' move into the White House, Prof. Johnson says that monetarism is beginning to fade for two reasons:
The monetarists are wrong and the Keynesians right in their view that inflation is a far less serious social problem than unemployment...

2 Major Air Mergers Get Nixon's Approval

By Leonard Sloane

NEW YORK, Jan. 1 (NYT).—Two major airline mergers—in each case bringing a troubled carrier under the wing of a stronger line—were approved yesterday by President Nixon...
The mergers, which had already been approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, will bring together American Airlines with Trans Caribbean Airways, and Northwest Airlines with Northeast Airlines...

Other amalgamations of air carriers are also widely anticipated as the lines seeked additional ways to restore or maintain profitability...
The Northwest-Northeast merger, however, is being contested by a committee of minority stockholders of Northeast. This committee said it would appeal to the courts to block the deal, charging that it was invalid under the laws of Massachusetts where Northeast is headquartered...

Take It Back

WASHINGTON.—A lot of things were said in 1970 that people wish they could take back. How would you feel if you were the person who said: To Walter Reuther, "Well, if you feel that strongly about it, why don't you write the President a letter?"

Art Buchwald

President and Vice-President have to support you. After all, you are a Republican. To Bernie Cornfeld of IOS, "You can't fire you, Bernie. It's your company, isn't it?" To Howard Hughes, "You either do it my way, Mr. Hughes, or I'll have to resign."

Chubby Children Prone to Colds, Study Suggests

LONDON, Jan. 1 (AP).—Chubby boys and girls appear to catch more colds than children of average weight, researchers said today. Doctors from Northampton General Hospital and the county child health department reported in the British Medical Journal on a study of 120 overweight children aged three months to two years, and 103 children of normal weight. The study found that more than a third of the overweight children had suffered from colds serious enough to require a doctor's care, compared with less than a quarter of the thinner children.

James Mason Goes Back To Shakespeare's Prospero

PARIS.—Over the past year one of the hottest screen properties has become Shakespeare's "The Tempest" of all things. Sir John Gielgud announced that he would play Prospero under Richard Attenborough's direction, next it was bruted about that Rex Harrison would star and that Christopher Miles, among others, would direct. Front runner and likely winner is James Mason with adapter-director Michael Powell.

and Peter O'Toole, who was to be Caliban, won't be. Andre Previn is writing the score and cartoonist Gerald Scarfe is designing the production. The adaptation by Michael ("The Bad Shoes") Powell is absolutely magical, James Mason says, though it sounds as if "The Tempest" may have suffered a sea-change: "We want to make it into a marvelous science-fiction spectacle with music," Mr. Mason says. "There's nothing disastrous that can happen at this moment," Mr. Mason says. Shooting is to begin in March or April, probably in Italy. Mia Farrow will play Ariel, Helen Mirren will be Miranda,

Brutus. "There is," he says, "no reason why you shouldn't film Shakespeare sometimes." In fact, he adds, Shakespeare can even be financially successful. The three Laurence Olivier have been successful, the two Zeffirelli, the Japanese "Macbeth," the Russian "Hamlet," our own original "Julius Caesar." Unfortunately these hits have been forgotten among flop television productions and such oddities as the Charlton Heston "Julius Caesar."

Florida Disney World to Open This Year

By Jon Nordheimer LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (UPI).—Out of the muck and matted tangle of cypress and palmetto trees, the state's spires of Cinderella's castle spring into the Florida sky, waiting to welcome a story-book princess and 10 million visitors a year. Walt Disney World, a monument in gingerbread to the creator of Mickey Mouse and a clutch of other childhood favorites, is taking shape in the interior of Florida, 16 miles southwest of Orlando. After eight years of planning, construction is under way in the biggest non-governmental project in the world, with 4,000 workmen engaged in creating a landscape designed to send shivers of excitement through the young and old of Middle America.

A continuing sluggish economy could effectively shut it off from its customers if Americans are forced to curtail holiday travel. The climate of central Florida has raised other questions. "We have to learn to operate all over again," said Roy Disney, brother of the late creative genius, Walt, who died in 1965 shortly after divvying his plans for Disney World. "It's different from California where we could use that beautiful climate most of the year. We're doing everything possible to fight the hot weather. We are experimenting with cool air, for example, need not only to cool an area but also to throw up a barrier to keep bugs out of an attraction."
